Summer Reflection

This summer, in order to hit the required GPA mark, I chose to take an introductory ASL course at the University. For the first time in a long time, I felt genuinely excited to go to class. I ended with an A- my highest grade from this school. I want to take that excitement and continued thirst for success into, not just this upcoming fall semester, but the rest of my years here.

My Inspiration

My older brother, Sam, is easily my biggest inspiration. He just graduated as a Finance major from NYU's Stern School of Business and is working in at Barclay's Bank in New York City. Every time I talk to him, I get so inspired to change and better my own life t

My S.M.A.R.T Plan

Make myself a priority	Don't focus much on boys or going out. Allow for me time. Get to the gym, eat well.
Get better grades	Stay organized, make flashcards. Utilize office hours
Stay on top of things	Schedule things out and due dates with

Rutgers Resource

During my spring semester of my freshman year, I went to C.A.P.S a couple of times to speak with a counselor about my mental and emotional state during my academic transitioning's. Overall, it was a pleasant experience. I do want to try and take advantage of something

Challenges

This summer, I had the challenge of having to quit my job and be very mindful of my spending habits. It has given me time to reflect and focus on the more important things in my life- the necessities. School becoming one of them. I anticipate a major challenge of mine during this upcoming school year to be studying. I have a bad habit of assuming I'll do well because of my memory. but I cannot allow myself to fall
